

Kiribati

Where to stay & what to do

The Republic of Kiribati, located in the Central Pacific, comprises 33 low lying coral atolls stretching over an area 3220km from east to west, along the equator, half way between Australia and Hawaii. Kiritimati (Christmas Island) in the Line Islands is to the east, Banaba (Ocean Island) is furthestmost west, with the Phoenix and Gilbert Groups, including Kiribati in between.

The 16 atolls that comprise the main island group of Kiribati, straddle the equator north of New Zealand. The coral atolls are tiny peaks of undersea mountains that rise through the Pacific Ocean; and are protected from the surrounding ocean by reefs. Trade winds moderate a hot, mid tropical marine climate.

water world

Sea dominates life. The nearest island is over the horizon, and a major land mass a thousand miles of endless ocean away. The sound of the sea is inescapable in Kiribati. The surrounding ocean and lagoons teem with colourful sea life, providing food for the I-Kiribati.

The land barely rises 2-3 metres above the sea at its highest point and is threatened ecologically by changes in the world's climate. It is so narrow, both the ocean and lagoon can nearly always be seen. On land, coconut palms, breadfruit and pandanus cover most of the islands.

The I-Kiribati are a Micronesian people and the population of Kiribati is estimated at 100,000, of which, as many as 40,000 live on the capital island of Tarawa.

Many families continue to live in a traditional extended family environment and, in many places, traditional island culture is very much alive today with limited influence from the outside world. Many I-Kiribati still craft their own homes and canoes with natural materials found on the islands. Kiribati dance continues to be synonymous with their identity.

The main visitor centres of Kiribati are Tarawa in the Gilberts Group and Kiritimati in the Line Group. These islands offer different types of visitor experience with cultural activities prominent on Tarawa while nature based activities are the focus of Kiritimati.

Tarawa

Tarawa is the capital of Kiribati and as such is the most populated of the islands. It can be divided into 2 distinct areas.

South Tarawa, the most populated & developed area of Kiribati is characterised by hustle & bustle & is the commercial & government centre of the islands.

North Tarawa in contrast is sparsely populated & offers tranquillity. There is little commercial activity & most people live in a traditional village setting.

Kiritimati

Located in the Line Group, Kiritimati lies at the eastern extreme of Kiribati. As one of the largest coral atolls in the world it has a huge tidal lagoon with shallow waters, while the rest of the atoll lined with deserted beaches, comprises salt flats, coconut palms and low level bushes.

Kiritimati is sparsely populated with most people living in small villages in the north of the island. The rest of the island is given over to nature & remains relatively undisturbed.

Other islands

Many outer islands of the Gilbert chain remain sparsely populated & rarely visited. Recent events such as the longest total solar eclipse & the UK reality TV show, 'The Real Swiss Family Robinson' have increased interest in these remote islands & some, such as Abemama, Butaritari & Abaiang are attracting more visitors. Traditional I-Kiribati life is prevalent here, with few organised activities. But it is possible to arrange an outer island experience.
